- Early Payment Discount Deadlines For The Fall School

The Human Design School Fall training program is quickly approaching and with it the deadlines for the early payment discount of 5%:

- ... Analyst training: Friday, October 13
- ... Package of Martin's classes: Thursday, October 19
- ... Reading Seminar: Thursday, October 19
- ... Understanding Lines: Wednesday, October 25
- ... Relating With Others: Friday, October 27

This year's classes are held at the Sagebrush Inn Conference facility. The Sagebrush Inn is a historic Taos property in the southside of town. Attendees at the trainings receive a corporate rate by mentioning the Human Design School when making the reservation. There are different kinds of rooms and setups, as well as the vacation rental service used by Human Design students, so if you'd like to have assistance with the accommodations in Taos, please call NSSA.

- Analyst training

The Analyst training is five days of interactive discussion geared to make speaking within the language of Human Design more specific and more meaningful. This class fulfills the requirement to become a licensed Human Design Analyst.

The written test that was the focus and goal of earlier trainings has been eliminated. Using design, it is quite possible to reference materials and to be familiar with the meanings without knowing all the names of gates, channels and keynotes. This class provides the opportunity to discuss the elements of Design in someone's chart by being solid with the logic of the system itself. The more familiar a student is with the body graph, the easier it is to communicate with fellow students, so for anyone interested in attending this class, being comfortable with the body graph is needed.

Advanced training required.

-- Martin Grassinger's Classes

Martin Grassinger from Hamburg, Germany, joins the school once again to address some of the topics that plague both analysts and students who aspire to fully utilize the incredible potential stored within the logic of Human Design. During the Spring School, Martin's delightful manner inspired everyone with his refreshing outlook on the way centers operate within a design, whether defined or undefined. Building on the basis of definition and type, understanding the whole of a chart is emphasized.

-- Reading Seminar

Open to analysts and analyst trainees, this class explores in depth what is essential in understanding someone else's chart (and of course, your own). Rather than sticking to a narrow format, Martin's approach begins with how the centers interlink to show what drives the person's life.

Analyst training required.

-- Understanding Lines

As anyone knows who's read the books, some of the lines are hard to apply within the context of the whole chart. With his compassionate approach, as well as an extensive study on both traditional I Ching texts and the Rave I'Ching, Martin is able to cast illumination on the lines. His orientation in studying someone's chart is to fully grasp lines. You are encouraged to present lines you'd like addressed.

Basic training required, advanced recommended.

-- Relating With Others

Who isn't interested in using the amazing tool of Human Design analysis to reveal the dynamics one constantly encounters in relationships? This class should be both exciting and fun, as it will be providing all attendees with the chance to have their relationships used as examples. You can bring transparencies with you.

Basic training required, advanced recommended.
